A Conscience Stricken Animal.

A few years ago Dr. Schomberg, the superintendent of the Botanic Garden of Adelaide, Australia, took charge of a select corps of monkeys and kangaroos, a "happy family," he might have called them, if it had not been for the depravity of an old babuina, or female Bhunder baboon. If she had not been the only representative of her species, he would have tried to get rid of her, for her only object in life seemed to be to make herself as disagreeable as possible. Solitary confinement made her wildly obstreperous, but in the family cage she kept the marsupials in a delirium of terror, and in the evening when her younger relatives ventured to enter the sleeping box she seemed to consider herself divinely ordained to remove them by force. But one day she attacked her own keeper, and without any apparent provocation lacerated his wrist in a shocking way. Schomberg at once ordered her to be shot.

The next morning the assistant keeper approached her cage with a shot gun which had often been used to shoot the rats that infested the menagerie building. The other monkeys seemed to expect another razzia, but the bhunder knew better. The moment she saw the gun she made a dash into the sleeping cage, and when the keeper tried to open the door she yelled as if she hoped to get off on a plea of insanity. Meaning to try her, the keeper waited till breakfast time, but the babuina did not show herself. She kept out of sight a full hour, till the mess-boy brought an extra lunch of sliced pumpkin, when she made a rush for the bucket in hopes of securing a portable piece. In that moment the keeper bolted the door of her sleeping cage, and went back for his shot gun. As soon as the babuina caught sight of him she flew toward her place of refuge, and finding the door locked, made a mad attempt to squeeze herself through the interspaces of the front railing. But the bars proved inflexible, and after another desperate pull at the sleeping-cage door, the babuina flung herself into a corner, closed her eyes, and was apparently dead with fear before the buckshot struck her.

Names of Men and Things

It is interesting to notice how the names of famous men are applied to various objects in every-day life. We now go into a shop and ask for a pair of Wellingtons, or a pair of Bluchers. The boot maker shows no surprise at such a request. He merely brings out a pair of boots. By such humble means as this is a hero's memory kept green. And as Wellington and Blucher have given their name to a kind of boot, so Spencer has to a coat, Stanhope to one kind of carriage, and Brougham to another; Petersham to a hat, Standish to an inkstand, Sandwich to an eatable, and Admiral Grogram to the mixture of spirits and water which goes by the name of "grog."

The old adage used to be, "nothing like leather." It should be "nothing like paper." Paper is used for almost every thing. Berlin Exhibition not long since, were paper buckets, "bronze" urns, asphalt roofing, water-cans, carpets, skirts, whole suits of clothes, jewelry material for garden walks, window curtains lanterns and pocket handkerchiefs. The most striking of the many objects exhibited in this material was, perhaps, a fire stove, with a cheerful fire burning in it. There were newly-invented railway carriages and carriage wheels, chimney pots, flour barrels, cottage walls, roofing tiles and bricks and dies for stamping, all made of paper. Attention has frequently been called to the value of ordinary sheets of paper as a substitute for bed clothes, or, at least, an addition to bed-clothes. The idea seems to have suggested the fabrication of "blankets" from the cheap material, and if all that is said of them is true, they ought to be extensively used.
